With increasing demand for Australia's charity dollars, we know reaching your fundraising target can be difficult.

Making your charity known to as many potential donors as possible is therefore critical.

The Humane Charities List is Australia's only guide to Australian Health Charities that do not fund animal research. Inclusion on the List is free at all stages and cannot be bought.

Many ordinary Australians are taking a growing interest in making informed choices, particularly when it comes to the charities they support financially. We are often contacted by members of the public regarding the animal testing policy of different charities. Most share an eagerness to support human health as well as animal interests.

Balancing these concerns can be difficult because many popular health charities fund animal research, often without making it clear to the public.

The Humane Charities List is a guide to health-related charities that do not engage in animal research. A Humane Charity is not necessarily opposed to animal research, rather they do not engage in it, and have no future intentions of doing so. The charities listed vary greatly in the health-related aspects they offer, but they all share a vision for improved human health and well-being.

By supporting Charities on this list, the public can be confident their donation will contribute to safer medicines and faster cures for people, and spare animals from the misery, and pain of life and death in an Australian laboratory.

The Humane Charities List is Australia's ONLY directory to Humane Giving. We are currently compiling the 2009 Humane Charities List and invite your inclusion.

I encourage you to visit our website www.humanecharities.org.au. Please contact me if you have any further questions, or comments.

I look forward to your response.
